Memorandum of Law

Paramount Title (Perfect Lawful Title) ;That which is superior; usually applied to the highest lord of the fee of lands, tenements, or hereditaments, as distinguished from the menses (or intermediate) lord. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 135. In the law of real property, the term "paramount title" properly denotes one which is superior to the title with which it is compared, in the sense that the Former Is the source or origin of the latter. It is, however, frequently used to denote a title which Is simply better or stronger than another. or will prevail over it. But this use is scarcely correct, unless the superiority consists in the seniority of the title spoken of as "paramount., See Hoopes T. Meyer, 1 Nev. 444. The complete and absolute ownership of land; a paramount and individual right of property in land. People v. Shearer, 30 Cal. 658. Also the real estate so owned. The inherent sovereign power claimed by the legislature of a state, of controlling private property for public uses, Is termed the "right of 2 Kent, Comm. 339. distinction has been made between "property" and "domain." The former is said to be that quality which is conceived to be in the thing itself, considered as belonging to such or such person, exclusively of all others. By the latter is understood that right which the owner has of disposing of the thing, lance "domain" and "property" are said to be correlative terms, 'lite one is the active right to dispose of; the other a passive quality which follows the thing ,and places it at the disposition of the owner. 3 Toullier, no. S3.
